

The Boulder Institute for Psychotherapy and Research

is pleased to present a 5-week Advanced Training Seminar

Integrating Neurobiological Findings Into Clinical Practice, 2009

Fridays – October 2, 9, 16, 23 & 30th – 10:15 AM-12:15 PM

with

Cynthia Divino, Ph.D. & Mary Sue Moore, Ph.D.

This course integrates new data from empirical neuroscience studies of brain function--including the roles played by mirror neurons, implicit/procedural memory, attachment processes, infant development studies, and the impact of trauma on the brain--with psychotherapeutic techniques. In particular, we will focus on the crucial role played by implicit/procedural memory in complex neuro-psychological processes such as dissociation, "enactments" and psychotherapeutic interactions. Psychodynamic technique serves as the starting point and tenants of psychotherapy are evaluated in light of this new data. Transference and counter-transference will be carefully examined through this framework. Suggestions for modifications of techniques that incorporate new findings--from neuro-scientific studies, and attachment theory, as well as clinical articles and chapters--will be a focus of the seminar.

The class is appropriate for experienced clinicians. The 5-week course is designed to cover essential elements of our expanding knowledge of neurobiological aspects of the psychotherapeutic process. We will focus quite a bit of attention on the application of this new understanding to work with patients who use dissociation as a learned defense in less severe as well as in extreme cases.
